in the key—two and four—were completely different. The "like" and "unlike" qualities of the sounds were reflected in the way they were played, with the "like" sounds being played in a more flowing, continuous manner and the "unlike" sounds being played in a more staccato, rhythmic manner. The use of these different sounds allowed the composer to create a unique and evocative musical experience.